Information on the Faith School Linking Programme

The Three Faiths Forum believes that in order for young people to reach both their personal potential and to form part of a cohesive society in the future they must engage with people of different faiths and beliefs. Through these interactions young people understand the significance of religious beliefs in real people's lives and discover the personal relationships people have with their faith. This learning is most effective when it comes from young people themselves – through both formal teaching and informal interactions.

In 2008-9 the Shared Futures programme ran a pilot supporting links between 20 schools (primary and secondary). Teachers devised lesson plans and long term projects with support from outside agencies. Young people engaged in identity activities, exchanged information about themselves and had a number of shared experiences through the year. Activities included: Training in community leadership; Dialogue skills; Workshops on immigration; Exploring religious festivals through art; Learning about democracy; Sharing narratives.

By January 2010, the Faith School Linking programme will provide support for 30-40 faith schools. The links will primarily be with other faiths schools, but may also be with local community schools. In their first year of involvement, pairs of schools will receive support in devising and delivering activities to ensure they are appropriate for interfaith settings. The involvement of outside staff will reduce through the year to ensure sustainability of the programme within the schools.

The programme is affiliated to the National Schools Linking Network and it shares their vision to inspire communities to create a shared future through fostering understanding of identities and diversity and in helping schools exceed the new community cohesion duty.

The project is funded by the Pears Foundation.
